

Boy dies in farm accident Sunday

By Cheryl Peterson
Editor

The search for a missing child has turned into an investigation of his accidental death on Sunday.

According to Alcona County Sheriff Douglas Atchison, the death of a four-year-old boy on a farm in Alcona County does not appear to involve "foul play at all." However, the investigation into the circumstances surrounding his death is ongoing.

The report of a missing child at approximately 4 p.m. on Sunday, June 23 brought officers from the Alcona County Sheriff's Department to the farm located on McConnell Road in Gustin Township. The boy and his mother, from Ossineke, were visiting the farm that afternoon.

When officers arrived, they were informed the boy had been missing for about one hour and were shown where his shoe was found near an uncovered hole of a septic tank inside a cattle barn.

The assistance of Alcona County Search and Rescue was requested. Members of the team eventually located and recovered the boy from the septic tank. CPR was started upon recovery and he was transported by Alcona EMS to St. Joseph Hospital in Tawas where he was pronounced dead.

First responders and fire fighters from Mikado, Harrisville and Barton City assisted at the scene.

Once the police investigation is complete, per state mandate, Atchison will convene a Child Death Review Board which will include Alcona County Prosecutor Thomas Weichel, Atchison, a detective from the Michigan State Police post in Alpena, the Alcona County EMS director, a representative from Community Mental Health, a representative from the Department of Human Services, the superintendent of Alcona Community Schools and the medical examiner. The goal of the board, Atchison said, "is to determine if there is any action we can take to prevent anything like this from happening in the future," Atchison said.

Road commission crews shake shoulders

The some 700 miles of road shoulder in Alcona County are under constant stress from traffic and routine road maintenance operations and without proper care, can contribute to the deterioration of the traveled portion of the road.

Alcona County Road Commission crews have been working on road shoulders in an attempt to reclaim and re-establish the shoulder line.

"Shaking the sods" is a term commonly used by road crews to describe a process used to recycle lost shoulder material. Using a road grader, scattered shoulder material is rolled back toward the road edge. In some instances, the shoulder is tilled in advance with a disk attachment on a tractor.

According to road commission manager director Jesse Campbell, it is difficult to see the value in this operation as it appears that all that is being pulled toward the road edge is clumps of sod; however, this tried and true method is a cost saving measure, that while catching some unwanted materials, allows the original shoulder gravel to be reclaimed instead of having to be replaced with new gravel.

In the process, the clumps are allowed to dry for a few days and then the useful material is separated by "shaking" or blading over the clumps with a truck equipped with an underbody scraper.

On hard-surfaced roads, the good material, mostly the original shoulder gravel, is bladed back against the pavement edge and compacted with a roller, while the remaining clumps and debris are bladed away from the edge and left to decompose naturally.

He explained well-maintained road shoulders on hard-surfaced roads play an important role in the life expectancy of the road. Optimally, an extended paved shoulder is the best defense, but in its absence, good maintenance is a reasonable contender. Good shoulders offer support to the road edge preventing breaking and cracking that eventually affects the traveled portion.

Properly sloped shoulders also allow storm water to drain away from the road and offer a smoother and safer transition for vehicles leaving the roadway.

On dirt surfaced roads, the road material is continually being pushed to the road side and ditches by traffic and during regular maintenance of the road. The constant effort to keep the road surface in a smooth condition often also creates a ridge along the edge of the traveled portion of the road.

Commonly referred to as a double ditch, this ridge traps water holding it back from flowing into the ditch and away from the road, Campbell said. This is especially problematic in the spring when it is so important for run off to be channeled away from the road to prevent saturation of the road bed leading to muddy conditions.

The same process is used on gravel roads as hard-surfaced roads. The material that has been pushed to the shoulders is drawn back toward the road, reclaiming as much of the original material as possible, casting off the unwanted debris, and eliminating the double ditch to allow water to run off into the road way.

Fishers return to the Lower Peninsula

Although there have been regular reports of fishers in the Lower Peninsula, the Michigan Department of Natural Resources had not been able to confirm fishers south of the Mackinac Bridge - until now.

Recently Melissa and Nate Sayers of Onaway, Mich. were out for walk in North Allis Township, located in Presque Isle County, when they saw something odd.

"We heard the neighbor's dog barking at a base of a tree, and we saw a ball of fur up in the tree; we initially thought it was a bear cub," said Melissa Sayers. "Then it moved, and we realized it wasn't a cub!"

The DNR was notified of the sighting and was provided pictures. Local DNR wildlife biologist Jennifer Kleitch investigated the location where the pictures were taken and confirmed the photos were legitimate.

"This is very exciting, but we always want to be sure," stated Kleitch. "We treat every rare animal sighting very seriously, and we must have evidence we can follow up on and investigate to make a definite identification."

Historically fishers were found throughout both the upper and lower peninsulas, although by 1936 deforestation and unlimited harvest resulted in the species vanishing from Michigan.

Beginning in 1961, fishers were reintroduced to the Upper Peninsula, and by 1989 the U.P. fisher population had recovered enough to establish a limited trapping season in the western U.P.

"It's great to see another native species return to parts of its former range," said DNR furbearer specialist Adam

Bump. "Fishers are another species in Michigan that benefit from habitat management and science-based harvest regulations."

Now that fishers have been confirmed in the Lower Peninsula, the DNR would like to gather additional information. Those who believe they have seen a fisher in the northern Lower Peninsula, and have physical documentation (pictures, locations of tracks, etc.), are asked to call 989-732-3541, ext. 5901.

Fishers are typically found in large forests, with a preference for areas dominated by coniferous trees. They have a very diverse diet, mostly comprised of small to medium-sized mammals such as mice and rabbits, along with dead deer. Fishers also will consume a fair amount of fruits and nuts, and are often noted for being one of the few species that successfully prey upon porcupines, although they typically make up a small portion of their diet.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

The Soloing Singles Club had a Father's Day picnic at Spencer Park in Greenbush. The park was pristine. The grass was cut, trash barrels empty, plenty of picnic tables and clean latrines. Besides being neat, the park has two baseball diamonds, a playground, nature trail and room to run.

I want to thank those in Greenbush who take care of this park, it's beautiful. If you haven't discovered Spencer Park yet just take Ridley Road past the railroad tracks and see the gem we have in Greenbush.

To the Editor,

I owe you and your readers an apology. My letter in your June 19 issue contained a factual error, which you pointed out. Peter Pettalia was not accompanied by a DEQ representative at the June 10 meeting in Lincoln, nor was the issue of fracking waste discussed. I got the meetings mixed up -- my apologies.

It was at the June 5 Alcona County Commissioners meeting that a DEQ representative confirmed the fact that waste water from fracking is highly toxic and can never be purified or reused for any purpose other than additional fracking. Mr. Pettalia was not present at that meeting.

However, a reporter from the Alcona County Review was present, busily taking notes. So, now I have a question. Your paper obviously knew that the substance of my statement was true, and yet your response to my letter was only to deny that any such conversation took place at the Pettalia meeting.

In fact, I have been unable to find any report in your paper of the June 5 county commissioners meeting that mentions this issue. Are you avoiding this subject as too

Shoulders

"Timing is everything. This process is most effective when roadside growth is minimal or dormant." He says it is also better to use this method early in the season to allow the shoulders to stabilize all summer," Campbell said.

"We occasionally use this method later in the fall, but try mostly to avoid it because if we don't get frost before we get snow, the shoulder material that was just reclaimed will get pushed right back toward the ditch as we clear snow from the road way."

He said reclaiming road material that has been moved to the shoulder or ditch area is an important operation and highly specialized machinery has been developed that aids in the reclamation process.

For now, Alcona County Road Commission crews will continue to use the less costly, yet tried and true method of shaking sods to get road shoulder material back to where it belongs.

Questions or concerns about the shoulder material reclaiming process or other road issues, can be directed to the Alcona County Road Commission at 301 N. Lake Street, P.O. Box 40, Lincoln, Mich. 48742, by phone at (989) 736-8168 or by e-mail at roads@alconacrc.com.

How to choose a home stair lift

Dear Savvy Senior,
My wife is having an increasingly difficult time going up and down the stairs in our house. We are interested in purchasing a stair lift, but aren't sure what to get or where to look. Can you help us?

Need a Lift

Dear Need,
A good home stair lift is a wonderful solution for seniors with mobility issues who have trouble with steps. A stair lift will carry your wife up and down the stairs in a safe seated position, giving her easy access to the second story or basement level of your home. But with so many options available how do you choose one that best meets your needs and budget.

Here are a few shopping tips along with some good companies that offer them.

There are two basic types of stair lifts that are sold today: Straight and curved. The type you need will depend upon the design of your staircase.

- A straight stair lift is one that travels in a straight line up a flight of stairs uninterrupted by landings, bends or curves, and costs between $3,000 and $5,000 installed.

- Curved lifts, however, are much more elaborate and will go around corners, bends and changes in direction. Curved lifts are also much more expensive typically running between $10,000 and $15,000 or more depending on the complexity of the installation.

Also available through certain companies are weather-proof lifts for outdoor steps, and standing stair lifts (also called perch lifts) for those who have trouble bending their knees.

You also need to know that all stair lifts mount to the stair treads, not to the wall, so they are very sturdy and can be installed in almost any home.

If your wife is a large person, you may need to get her a heavy-duty lift with a wider seat and bigger lifting capacity – all companies offer them. Or, if she's tall, find out about raising the seat height during installation.

Most stair lifts available today also have seats, armrests and footplates that fold up out of the way, and swivel seats that make getting into and out of the chair easier. They also come with standard safety features like seatbelts, breaking systems and footrest sensors, push-button or rocker-switch controls located on the armrest for easy operation, and "call send" controls which allow you to call or send the unit to the other end of the stairs. Make sure the lift you choose has all these features.

Depending on the company, you may also have the option of choosing between an electric (AC) and a battery powered (DC) stair lift. Battery powered units charge at the base station (some recharge anywhere on the track) are quieter, smoother and better than electric lifts, and will work even if there's a power failure in the home.

While there are many companies that make, sell and install stair lifts, the most respected in the industry are Bruno (bruno.com, (866) 345-7537) and Stannah (stannah-stairlifts.com, (800) 877-8247), followed by Harmar (harmar.com, (800) 833-0478) and Sterling (handicare.com, (866) 276-5438).

Unfortunately, Medicare does not cover stair lifts, but many states offer Medicaid waivers that will pay for lifts to those that qualify, and the Veteran's Administration (VA) offers cash grants to veterans with disabilities for home safety improvements.

Savvy Senior

To save some money, you may want to consider purchasing a used or refurbished model. Or, if you need a stair lift for only a short period of time, consider renting one. Most companies offer these options, and many offer financing programs too.

To get started, contact some stair lift companies who will put you in touch with a dealer in your area. All dealers provide free in-home assessments and estimates, and can help you choose an appropriate lift.

(Send your senior questions to: Savvy Senior, P.O. Box 5443, Norman, OK 73070, or visit SavvySenior.org.)

The dad on the bus

By Kathryn Fritz Kniep
Columnist

Before he was the post-master in Glennie or in Harrisville ... before his 20 years on the Alcona Community Schools Board of Education, many of them as president of the board ...before he served 16 terms as worthy patron of the Eastern Star or 65 years as a Mason, George McIntyre was my school bus driver and the father of my dear friend.

Anyone who has grown up attending a community school will tell you that the 30 minutes or so spent on the bus, twice a day, comprises a big part of a high school student's social life.

George certainly would tell you that. He rode herd on us most of the years we rode the bus, dealing with our high energy, our teenage drama and our blatant lack of concern for the driver's nerves – and he did it all with his back to us.

George was born and raised in Alcona County and while he was an extremely intelligent man, in times of stress he sometimes lapsed into Alcona County patois. From time to time, pushed beyond endurance by the 60-some young people high on life behind him, he pulled the bus to a stop on the side of the road and bellowed (most often at the boys) "If you don't settle down, ya' can't ride na'more."

It generally worked. We weren't exactly afraid of George, but we didn't want to push him over the edge either. In the irreverent way of kids, though, his threat became a part of our vocabulary. Many of us still say to one another, from time to time, "If you don't straight up, ya' can't ride na'more."

And we say it with the kind of deep affection you gain for the people who helped to raise you.

As I said, George was the father of one of my dearest high school friends. He married Wendy's mother when we were in fifth grade, when he was approaching 40 and I'm sure neither he nor his wife, Betty, expected that down the road they would have two more children. I don't remember if George ever formally adopted Wendy. But as hard as it may be to imagine in a time when we need television commercials to remind men of their responsibilities as even biological fathers, George took his seriously.

I don't ever remember, in all the times I was in and out of their house, ever hearing anyone refer to anyone in that family as a "step" or a "half" anything. They were a family, a mom and a dad and three kids and that was the end of it.

As happens in small towns, George and Betty were part of the group of parents who oversaw all of our crowd as if they were their own. George, however, had a little more knowledge of our activities than the others, as observed through his rearview mirror.

In our senior year, when we'd earned the back seat of the bus, our alleged boy-friends – graduated the year before – took to following the bus to school some mornings, while we giggled and waved from the big back window. It might have been a good opportunity to skip school. I mean, there they were with a car and everything. It might have been, had not George been standing by the door of the bus, arms folded and frowning, to watch us march our little fannies in our little flippy miniskirts in the school's front door.

Later, as a young married woman, I worked for George at the bowling alley, which he managed for his father-in-law. Automatic pin setters had only recently replaced pin boys in those days, and the newfangled machines often hung up, leaving the bowler's ball to spin helplessly in the far end of the gutter beside the pins.

George had absolutely forbidden the "girls" on staff to mess with this situation. "You'll cut your arm off," he warned us. One of my very favorite images of George is watching him walk down the alley, one foot in each adjacent gutter – looking for all the world like a very large, very blonde penguin – to fix the pinsetter.

He continued his father-figure role, even then. Driving me home on nights when I didn't have the car, he would drop me off in the driveway of my very inexpensive rental. If the house was dark and empty, as it sometimes was, he would give me these instructions. "You go in and turn the light on. If everything's all right, blink the porch light." He must have been tired from a day that started at seven a.m. and often ended at 11 p.m. or later. But he sat in the driveway those extra minutes until he saw my porch light blink.

George never entirely lost the dairy farmer he started out to be. I can't count the number of times, at various "dress-up" occasions – be it Wendy's wedding or a lodge event, or his own 60th birthday party – that he said, "I just want to go home and take my shoes off." I thought it was funny at the time. Now I realize that he was a big guy, who worked on his feet a good many hours of each day.

He liked to present himself, as did all our fathers, as the grumpy dad of the 1960s. There certainly were times when he gave us heck -- times two. And there certainly were times when we deserved it. But in the way of daughters and their friends, we knew that underneath the bluster, there was an old softy who would do anything to make us happy.

On those rare occasions when we actually accomplished something, we knew he was proud of us, even while he lectured us on curfews and "ladylike" behavior.

Puttin' On The Fritz

I guess we knew, somewhere inside where teenagers don't think about it much, that he loved us. I hope he knew that we loved him, as well.

One of the best things George ever got, I think, was his lounge chair. Betty had a matching one and in their later years, I'd often notice them through an early evening window, sitting together, watching television. I hope too, that if he had to leave us, he's in his great lounge chair in the sky, with Betty beside him and his shoes off.

In his lifetime, George contributed greatly to his community – from plowing the snow from its streets to caring deeply about educating its young people. And for a small group of silly teenage girls, he helped to bring us to what we are today, be that as it may.

I think, if you'd asked him, George would have told you he lived a pretty good life. I only know that his absence will leave a small hole in my heart and that without him just down the block, I can't help feel like I can't ride na'more.

Organization Notes

DAR River Aux Sables

On June 8, River Aux Sables Chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution met at the Wilber United Methodist Church in East Tawas. In keeping with June 14 being officially Flag Day, flag chairman Rachel McCready of Tawas City presented the history of the American flag showing the progression of the flag designs used from the earliest English settlement to our current flag which shows 50 five-point stars for each state in the current union.

Seventeen year old Robert G. Heft of Saginaw, Mich. created a flag design as his class project in 1958 in anticipation of Hawaii being admitted by 1959 as the 50th state. It took him 12 and a half hours to lay it out and sew it together. He received a B- for his design. Bob asked his teacher if his design was accepted by Congress, would she reconsider his grade. She agreed, and Bob applied to his congressman to see if his design could be accepted as the official flag. It was recognized by presidential proclamation as our official flag and Bob was awarded the A from his teacher as promised as well as national recognition as the designer of our current 50 star flag.

Members of the cabinet not present at the last meeting were sworn in officially: Pat Kramer of Lincoln as regent; Barb Penny of Au Gres, Mich. as vice regent; Ruth Danielson of Tawas City as chaplain; Jaye Martz of Gladwin, Mich. as recording secretary; Denise Liebold of West Branch, Mich. as historian; and Margy Holzheuer of Hale as librarian.

The next meeting will be held September 15 in Lincoln. Any lady of 18 years who wishes more information about joining DAR may access our website at <http://www.riverauxsables.mich-dar.net>.

New faces in new places in the county building

By Mary Weber
Staff Writer

Two new employees have been hired to fill vacancies from recently retired Alcona County Deputy Register of Deeds Carole Campbell and Deputy Clerk Brenda Cordes.

The new deputy register is Missy Cordes. She grew up in Burton, Mich. and moved to the Hubbard Lake area in 1997. She has previously been employed by Alpena Alcona Credit Union where she worked for 13 years as supervisor of the high school branch and teller.

Cordes took over the job of deputy register on May 28 and is still learning about the position. Her basic duties are to assist the register of deeds in registering documents, making sure the necessary information is entered correctly, helping members of the public look up documents, answer telephone calls and handle passport applications.

"It's a fun experience and I like interacting with the public. I'm always up to the challenge to learn new things," Cordes said.

She married Rod Cordes last year and has two children, Jeremy, 21 and Zack, 18, who are both graduates of Alcona High School.

New Deputy Clerk Barbara Bruske, is a familiar face in the clerk's office as she held the position of payroll clerk for 18 years.

Bruske said she has al-

ways enjoyed working in the clerk's office and when Patricia Truman offered her the position, she felt honored and accepted it.

Because the county conducts cross-training within departments, Bruske feels confident and comfortable in the new position. As deputy clerk Bruske assists the clerk with accounts payable, payroll, fringe benefits, circuit court records, elections and vital records such as birth, death, assumed names, concealed weapons permits and more. Bruske said there is a lot that falls under the umbrella of duties in the clerk's office.

"I like the people I work with a lot and feel very lucky. The camaraderie in the court house is good and I enjoy working with the public and helping them," she said.

Bruske moved to Alcona County in 1977. She has five children, Marie, Catherine, Stephen, Elizabeth and Christine and 10 grandchilddren. Bruske said she loves this area and wouldn't want to be anywhere else. She enjoys boating, fishing, being involved in the community and her church.

Taking over Barbara Bruske's position as payroll clerk is Lori Achtabowski who started in the position on May 13.

Achtabowski was previously employed by the Northeast Michigan Community Service Agency (NEMCSA) where she worked for four years with the weatherization program. Prior to that Achtabowski held a 10 year position with ITT (now Cooper Standard) doing payroll for 600 employees.

As payroll clerk, Achtabowski's duties include completing payroll for all county employees -- which can be anywhere from 120 to 150 employees -- bi-weekly and assisting with accounts payable.

Achtabowski is being cross trained for other responsibilities within the clerk's office. "It's a wonderful office atmosphere and a great group to work with. I love doing payroll," she said.

Achtabowski has lived in the Alcona area for much of her life and is a graduate of Alcona High School. After graduation, she traveled extensively throughout the states, to return in 1994 when she met her husband, Joe. They live next door to her parents, Huck and Jenny Pheister. She has one adult son, Mike.

Rehabilitation efforts of AuSable River's South Branch continue with debris placement

The fish and insect communities will soon benefit from a habitat project in the South Branch of the AuSable River. Contractors will place large woody complexes - clusters of a small number of trees - in select areas from the mouth of Thayer Creek in Crawford County to the main stem of the AuSable River.

According to the Michigan Department of Natural Resources, this will create a better environment for fish and other organisms.

The AuSable River is one of the country's most notable cold-water rivers, explained Tim Cwalinski, DNR fisheries biologist for the Northern Lake Huron Management Unit. High groundwater inputs provide excellent water temperature for cold-water fish in most streams in the watershed, including the South Branch of the AuSable River. Historically, the river has been noted for clear, cold, stable flow. Clusters of woody debris and high gradient create an ideal habitat for a productive and diverse fishery.

European settlement of the region stripped areas along the AuSable of its natural woody debris in the last half of the 1800s, creating problems that continue to exist today. These problems include a scarcity of wood in portions of the stream channel and near-shore areas, and excessive amounts of sand.

Efforts to restore fisheries in the South Branch of the AuSable River have been ongoing for more than 10 years. Recently, the DNR Fisheries Division contracted with Restoration Dredging, Inc. to assist in these activities. The final two-year segment of a 10-year commitment to restore the river system will occur between June 2013 and July 2015, Cwalinski said.

Restoration Dredging, Inc. will be responsible for planning and implementing the placement of large woody debris complexes into the South Branch of the Au Sable River, on private and public shorelines. Landowner permission will be obtained for work along private shorelines.

All trees will be transported and placed into the river solely by helicopter. Trees will be harvested on either state or federal land. The placement sites will be discussed in a public review process before they are approved by fisheries division.

Cwalinski said landowners along the South Branch of the AuSable River in Crawford County will have an opportunity for their property to be considered for stream enhancement locations and contribute to ongoing rehabilitation efforts. Permission will be required from landowners to place one or more large woody debris structures on the river bottom of their property after September 1, 2013.

The enhancements in the South Branch of the AuSable River enables a strong natural resource-based economy in Crawford County and builds upon strong economic relationships and partnerships between the DNR, the USDA Forest Service and area businesses, Cwalinski explained. Local subcontractors on this project include Northpoint Fisheries Management in Grayling and S&J Excavating in Roscommon. Construction Helicopters, Inc. of Howell, Mich. is providing the aviation portion of this project.

Questions on this rehabilitation initiative can be directed to Tim Cwalinski, fisheries biologist for the Northern Lake Huron Management Unit at (989) 732-3541, ext. 5072.

Scam alert: Calls, e-mails can be tricks

Recently, the Michigan State Police, Alpena Post has been contacted by numerous citizens reporting that they have been the victim of a scam. These scams range from telephone calls that family members are in trouble in a foreign country, telephone calls for free medical supplies, e-mails stating that they have just won a prize and need to act fast, to letters in the mail containing fraudulent checks.

According to Trooper Ashley Simpson, the list of frauds and scams goes on and on.

"If you receive a call that a family member is in trouble in a foreign country, the caller will usually tell you that you cannot tell anyone else about this event or that family member will be harmed. The caller will then tell you to wire transfer money to a specific location.

"You should ask specific questions of the caller to gather more information about where they are stating your family member is. Once you obtain this information, you can then contact other family members or complete a search online to verify this information. Never just transfer money to someone you do not know because most likely this person is a scammer," Simpson said.

"If you receive a phone call requesting personal information or banking information, you should never give this information out," she said. "The callers will start by telling you that you qualify for the free or discounted medical supplies for a specific health condition. That caller's next line is, 'Before the supplies can arrive, I need to confirm your condition with your age, Social Security number and the name and phone number of your doctor.' If it were a legitimate business, they would have this information. This means, this caller is a scammer out to steal your identity.

"If you receive an e-mail stating that you need to act fast because you have won a prize, but you do not recognize the e-mail address, it is probably a scammer. They will ask you to wire transfer money to them, to prove who you are. Once they receive the money, they will then send you the prize. This is the scammer's way of stealing your money, because there was never a prize you had won.

"If you receive a fraudulent check in the mail, you will be directed to cash the check and then forward a portion of that money to another address. Once you have completed this, they advise there will be a larger check coming to you as compensation for your efforts. Most likely, the original check is a fraudulent check, and you will be expected to cover this check with your own funds," she said.

According to Simpson, an estimated 10 to 15 percent of the U.S. population falls for one kind of scam or another each year, according to Federal Trade Commission research. Studies show that the average fraud victim is between 55 and 65 years old. For further information, go to www.aarp.org and type in the key word "fraud."

Local youth attend pre-college program

Seventeen youth and three adults from Alcona County recently attended the annual 4-H Exploration Days at Michigan State University (MSU) -- a precollege program designed for 11-19 year olds.

The youth program, coordinated by state 4-H youth development staff and populated with local volunteers and county staff, offers youth a glimpse into college life at MSU, including dormitory living and attending classes taught by university professors, 4-H volunteers and county staff across the East Lansing, Mich. campus. Youth register in March and are able to select classes in various interest areas including applied sciences, recreation, leadership, physical fitness, communications, art and entrepreneurship. After a day of classes and dorm food, participants are able to use their free time to explore the many sights on campus as well as take part in many of the scheduled tours, presentations and recreational activities.

Scheduled evening activities this year included The Amazing Magic Stu, a comedian-magician, as well as a special appearance from former MSU mens' basketball player Anthony Innani, who spoke to youth about autism. On the second night, the 4-H State Awards program showcased the hard work and dedication of many of the youth across the state and was followed by a dance. The program, in its 43rd year, attracted over 2,500 youth and adults from almost every

Monitoring the health of Michigan's forests

Forestry is a relatively young science in the lake states. Native insects and diseases influence the forest differently as the forest grows older, as the forest succeeds to different mixtures of trees, and as climate extremes - droughts and warming trends - change the playing field.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources' (DNR) Forest Health program monitors the occurrence and impacts of both native and exotic forest insects and diseases. Understanding the impacts of pests and other stressors helps resource managers make short-term and long-range plans to keep Michigan's forest ecosystems functioning sustainably and productively.

"We spend time flying over the forests looking for problems like defoliation, discolored leaves and tree mortality," said DNR forest health specialist Dr. Robert Heyd. "We spend time evaluating the seriousness of problems detected from the air or reported by forest resource managers and the public."

"Mostly what we see as we fly Michigan's 20 million acres of forest land are healthy forests. Occasionally, we have widespread outbreaks like the forest tent caterpillar and gypsy moth defoliation of hardwoods in the northern Lower Peninsula, which lasted for several years and ended in 2011."

Different tree species have different site requirements (e.g., soil, moisture and climate). Trees growing on suitable sites are healthier and less likely damaged by native pests.

"When our forests are stressed by events like extended droughts, trees occurring on less-than-optimum sites, and trees that are toward the end of their natural life, they are most heavily impacted," Heyd said. "Impacts include declining health as evidenced by branches in the upper crown dying and discoloring. These weakened trees are more susceptible to 'secondary pests.'"

Heyd explained that secondary pests are those that only impact weakened trees. Examples include bark beetles of pine and root rots of hardwoods. Healthy pines produce pitch such that when bark beetles try to chew through the bark, they are "pitched-out." When pines are weakened, they produce less pitch, allowing bark beetles to successfully attack the tree. In hardwoods, healthy trees produce chemicals and stored energy such that root rots cannot invade roots. But stressed trees have less energy for such chemicals and are successfully invaded.

It takes a few years of normal rainfall for trees to completely recover energy reserves and corresponding defenses to pest attacks.

"Adding an inch of water to the rooting zone of yard trees during periods of drought is the single most important way to keep the trees healthy and resistant to native pests," said Roger Mech, DNR forest health specialist. "Of course, exotic pests like oak wilt and the emerald ash borer attack both healthy and weakened trees."

The DNR also recommends keeping the following in mind:

- when planting a tree or thinning a woodlot, it is important to match selected tree species to the planting site. Be sure that the tree selected actually grows in that area and that is matched to the site in terms of soil and the availability of sunlight.

county in the state.

Participation in this three day, two night program increased as 17 members of Alcona 4-H attended this year compared to four youth in 2012. Of the group, the overwhelming majority had never attended the event before but are all looking forward to going again next year.

In order to help with registration fees and local youth raised over $600 to help offset the total cost of $165 per person. In addition to this support, the group was given $560 in scholarships from MSU and over $1,000 in local scholarships from the 4-H Advisory Council as well as a fund set up in memory of former MSU Extension County Extension Director George Byelich.

For more information about this or any other MSU Extension program or event, call the Alcona MSU Extension Office at (989) 724-6478.

- In a woodlot, promote trees that are best adapted to the site, are growing vigorously and have no serious pest problems.

- It is always best to seek the assistance of a consulting forester when managing a woodlot.

In addition to native pests, people continue to import exotic insects, diseases and plants, some of which greatly influence the function and appearance of forest ecosystems. Although there are quarantines preventing the introduction of pests from other countries, inspecting the approximately 300 million shipping containers received annually is a daunting task.

Well-known examples of exotic pests include Dutch elm disease, chestnut blight, beech bark disease, the emerald ash borer, oak wilt and the gypsy moth. Once introduced, imported insect and disease problems continue to move around the country in firewood and nursery stock. Exotic plant species such as purple loosestrife, spotted knapweed, garlic mustard and buckthorn are examples of exotic plants that can disrupt native ecosystems.

During the growing or bug season, forest health specialists said they are busy answering daily inquiries like: "What's killing (or feeding on) my tree?" or "What bug is this?"

"Answering these questions serves many purposes," Mech said. "Understanding that a condition or pest is not damaging is as important as knowing what to do about serious pests. Knowing that an insect isn't really harmful creates peace of mind, improves environmental awareness, saves the caller the expense of treatment, and eliminates or reduces the unnecessary use of pesticides."

When not surveying Michigan's forests or evaluating the impact of a current pest situation, DNR forest health specialists work with state, federal, private and industrial resource managers. Helping natural resource managers recognize and manage current and long-term forest health problems is an important part of the job. News releases, reports and a Forest Health program website (www.michigan.gov/foresthealth) are used to inform and educate professionals and the public.

The DNR's Forest Health program monitors the long-term health of Michigan's forest resource by using a network of permanently established survey plots that are monitored over time. This helps to detect more subtle changes in forest condition, growth and productivity.

Monitoring the health of Michigan's forest has been and continues to be enhanced by advances in computer-aided data analysis, navigation, mapping and image-processing technologies. So, as in many professions these days, there is a vital place for the application and advancement of technology.

"All of these tools help us meet the Forest Health program goal of keeping forest ecosystems functioning well over long periods of time to provide resilience to short-term stress and adaptation to long-term change," Heyd said. "The health and sustainability of Michigan's forests are vital to ensuring this natural resource can be enjoyed and used by current and future generations."

Discussion held regarding facts and developments in diabetes research

A disease so prevalent that it is labeled an epidemic in America, diabetes affects nearly 26 million children and adults, according to the American Diabetes Association (the Association). As this number grows, so does the urgency of finding a cure.

Health experts around the world research type 1, type 2 and gestational diabetes in hopes of discovering a cure. More than 13,000 top scientists, physicians and other health care professionals shared their cutting-edge research, treatment recommendations and other diabetes advances at the Association's 73rd annual Scientific Sessions in Chicago, Ill. from June 21 to June 25.

Although Scientific Sessions is primarily for medical professionals, its core is about improving the lives of people affected by diabetes -- shaping the direction of research, technology and care with a focus on treatment and prevention and ultimately finding a cure for this devastating disease.

Individuals don't need to be health experts to benefit from the information shared at the conference. A special video

News Bureau translates the in-depth scientific findings into an easy-to-understand format available through the association's social media channels.

Visit www.diabetes.org/breakingnews to view short briefings and interviews produced onsite last year, as well as information as it becomes available this year at the event.

Staying informed is an important part of managing a diabetes diagnosis. The association helps those affected by diabetes sort through the information out there and better understand the facts.

Here are some of the top myths and misconceptions about diabetes:

Myth: Diabetes is not that serious of a disease.

Fact: Diabetes causes more deaths a year than breast cancer and AIDS combined. Two out of three people with diabetes die from heart disease or stroke.

Myth: Anyone who is overweight or obese, will eventually develop type 2 diabetes.

Fact: Being overweight is just one risk factor; other risk factors are family history, ethnicity and age. Most overweight people never develop type 2 diabetes, and many people with type 2 diabetes are at a normal weight.

Myth: People with diabetes should eat special diabetic foods.

Fact: A healthy meal plan for people with diabetes is generally the same as a healthy diet for anyone - low in fat (especially saturated and trans fat), moderate in salt and sugar, with meals based on whole grain foods, vegetables and fruit. Diabetic and "dietetic" foods generally offer no special benefit.

Myth: People with diabetes can't eat sweets.

Fact: If eaten as part of a healthy meal plan, sweets and desserts can be eaten by people with diabetes. The key to sweets is to have a very small portion and save them for special occasions.

Myth: People with diabetes are more likely to get colds and other illnesses.

Fact: Individuals with diabetes are no more likely to get a cold or another illness. However, people with diabetes are advised to get flu shots. This is because any illness can make diabetes more difficult to control, and therefore serious complications are more likely to develop. For more information, visit www.diabetes.org.

StarWatch By Gary Becker - Spica: Alpha Star of "Lizard Lady"

The moon is full at week's start, so expect to see only the brightest stars and planets. Venus has now become the sole guardian of evening twilight. View it about 30 minutes after sundown in the same direction where the "sun goes down" low in the WNW. If you look just a little bit west of south at 10 p.m., you'll notice two very bright luminaries; the one to the left is Saturn. To Saturn's right will be Spica, the alpha star of Virgo the Virgin. Although Virgo is one of the zodiacal constellations through which the sun passes, its star pattern is only discernable under the clearest of skies because of the faintness of the other stars which form the constellation. She looks more like a "lizard lady" in a sleeping bag, and I can understand fully why suitors have been reluctant to call. Blue-white Spica, however, is a whole different story. It is truly one of the more luminous stars in the heavens, but because of its 250 light year distance, it appears as only the 16th brightest star of the night. However, if Spica were moved to 10 parsecs or 32.6 light years from our sun, the standard distance to which the brilliance of all stars are compared, Spica would rival the planet Venus in luster. In contrast, Sol would be an inconspicuous star, even from rural locations, similar to the other faint stars which form Virgo, the "Lizard Lady's" body. Spica is, at the very least, a double star system with two hot, blue-white luminaries orbiting each other in just over four days. Their separation is a mere 11 million miles, about 1/8th the Earth-sun distance. The brighter component of the pair has a surface temperature of 40,800 degrees F, while its fainter companion is just 7000 degrees cooler. The temperature of our sun, in comparison, is only 10,500 degrees F. Catch Spica now; for in the weeks ahead, it will continue to slide towards the western horizon, exiting the deep twilight sky by late August. www.astronomy.org

Bird Magnet
I love the tray feeder I put up in the middle of my yard. It is a bird magnet. I've a multitude of birds like cardinals, woodpeckers, wrens, catbirds, titmice and many others. Best of all is it so easy to clean. I just hose it off every night. Works like a charm.

STRANGE BUT TRUE by Samantha Weaver

• It was French Enlightenment writer Voltaire who made the following sage observation: "Faith consists in believing when it is beyond the power of reason to believe."

• If Niagara Falls emptied into the Grand Canyon, the giant chasm would be filled within 6 months.

• Next time you're rolling the dice, pick up a die and take a closer look. The opposite sides of each gaming cube always add up to 7.

• You might think of Uncle Sam as a fictional character, but he's actually based in fact. The original Uncle Sam was one Samuel Wilson, born in Massachusetts in 1766. When he was 14 years old, he joined the army to fight in the American Revolution. Once the war was over, he moved to Troy, N.Y., started working in the meat-packing industry, and became known locally as "Uncle Sam" due to his jovial manner and ethical business practices. During the War of 1812, Sam won a contract to provide meat to troops stationed nearby. To keep track of which crates of meat were destined for the troops, he stamped "U.S." on them, even though that abbreviation for United States was not yet in common use. When his packing plant was inspected in October of 1812, a government inspector asked a nearby worker what "U.S." stood for. Unsure of the abbreviation himself, the worker replied that it must stand for the name of the owner, Uncle Sam. Though the answer was in error, it took hold, and soldiers soon began calling military rations "bounty of Uncle Sam."

• If you remember the early-1960s TV series "Route 66," you might be surprised to learn that the show was actually shot in Florida and Oregon, nowhere near the fabled highway.

MOMENTS IN TIME The History Channel

• On July 14, 1789, Parisian revolutionaries and mutinous troops storm and dismantle the Bastille, a royal fortress built in 1370 that had come to symbolize the tyranny of the Bourbon monarchs. This dramatic action signaled the beginning of the French Revolution, a decade of terror in which King Louis XVI and his wife Marie Antoinette were executed.

• On July 12, 1861, special commissioner Albert Pike completes treaties with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, giving the new Confederate States of America several allies in Indian Territory. Many of these tribes had been expelled from the Southern states in the 1830s and 1840s, but still chose to ally themselves with those states during the Civil War.

• On July 8, 1918, author Ernest Hemingway is severely wounded while carrying a companion to safety on the Austro-Italian front during World War I. Hemingway, working as a Red Cross ambulance driver, was decorated for his heroism.

• On July 13, 1930, France defeats Mexico 4-1 and the United States defeats Belgium 3-0 in the first-ever World Cup football matches, played simultaneously in host city Montevideo, Uruguay. The World Cup has since become the world's most-watched sporting event.

• On July 9, 1941, cracker-jack British cryptologists break the Enigma secret code used by the German army to direct ground-to-air operations on the Eastern front. Various keys would continue to be broken by the Brits over the next year, each conveying information of even higher secrecy and priority.

• On July 11, 1979, parts of Skylab, America's first space station, come crashing down on Australia and into the Indian Ocean five years after the last manned Skylab mission ended. The cylindrical space station was 118 feet tall and weighed 77 tons.

• On July 10, 1985, in Auckland harbor in New Zealand, Greenpeace's Rainbow Warrior sinks after French agents in diving gear plant a bomb on the hull of the vessel. A British newspaper uncovered evidence of French President Francois Mitterrand's authorization of the bombing plan.

Hiring contractor for home remodel

Dollars And Sense
 By David Uffington

If a home repair or remodeling project is beyond your abilities and you need to hire a contractor, be cautious. Remodeling and home repair are areas that are ripe for cons and scams, so take appropriate steps to ensure that your project comes out the way you hoped.

Before you start, know what you want and what your budget will be.

To start the hunt for a contractor, get referrals from friends and family. Conduct phone interviews of each potential contractor and ask if he has worked on projects the size of yours, and whether he will give you a list of current and previous clients.

Gather written estimates from three or four of your potential contractors. Know what you want in your project but be willing to listen to ideas. Estimates should include full materials lists (as well as the location where the items will be purchased) and the cost of labor. Have the potential contractor include a proposed payment schedule, and read it carefully.

Any contractor who wants half the money up front might have financial problems or will abscond with the money without doing any work. Aim for no more than 10 percent up front, with other payments made at points of completion through the project, with approximately 20 percent held until the project is finished and approved.

Toss out any estimates that are extremely low.

Contact the local Better Business Bureau to ask about any complaints on the contractors on your list. Also call the consumer protection agency for your state.

Contact the clients on the lists you were provided and ask if they were happy with the work. Ask if you can see the projects. Drive by current projects and see how they look.

Once you've chosen a contractor, put your deal in writing, including drawings you've made, which the contractor should sign; a copy of the workman's compensation policy and liability insurance; a schedule and a lien statement. The last is important, because you could be stuck with the bill if the contractor doesn't pay off subcontractors and materials suppliers.

If you think that all these steps aren't necessary, the Better Business Bureau has issued a report listing the top 10 categories of consumer issues it was called about in 2012. Roofing contractors, general contractors, plumbers, heating and air conditioning, and construction and remodeling services are all in the top 10.

Housing vouchers for homeless vets

Veterans Post
 By Freddy Groves

Nine thousand veterans are going to receive vouchers for permanent housing.

A joint effort between Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and Department of Veterans Affairs will spend $60 million at public-housing agencies across the country to provide Section 8 housing for veterans.

Called HUD-VASH, for HUD Veterans Affairs Supportive Housing, the program not only provides most of the cost of rentals, but also case management and services from nearby VA medical centers. Many homeless veterans suffer from chronic disabling conditions, such as mental health or substance abuse disorders, or physical disabilities. Veterans who are accepted into the program are expected to participate in case management, treatment recommendations and assistance for recovery.

Some specifics:

- Veterans in the program won't pay any more than 30 percent of their income for rent.
- Both single veterans and those with families are eligible for housing.
- Veterans must be able to complete daily living activities and live independently in the community, with the support services and case management.

The VA is making headway in tackling homelessness, with the goal of putting an end to veteran homelessness by 2015. Statistics show a 17 percent decline since 2009. So far, it's put 42,557 formerly homeless veterans into housing through the VASH program. More funds will be announced this summer.

If you're a homeless veteran, or know of one, find out if you qualify for the housing assistance program by contacting the VA's National Call Center for Homeless Veterans at 1-877-4AID-VET (1-877-424-3838). You might be referred to the point person for the homeless program at the closest VA facility.

If you're also unemployed, ask about the Homeless Veteran Supported Employment Program for job development and vocational assistance.
