Small businesses help spur state job growth

By Elizabeth FergusonCapital News Service

Michigan's small businesses are expecting to hire more employees and increase wages in the upcoming months, according to the Small Business Association of Michigan.

Almost 30 percent of the 600 small businesses surveyed by the association in January said they hired more workers in the past six months, and 33 percent intend to hire more workers in the next six months. Nearly 40 percent of the surveyed businesses said they planned to raise wages.

In 2014, there were 216,956 businesses in Michigan with less than 50 employees. Last year these businesses hired 20,526 new employees, according to the state's Bureau of Labor Market Information and Strategic Initiative.

"Small businesses make crucial contributions to economic growth by providing jobs, local business activity and revitalization of our cities," Michael Rogers, Small Business Association of Michigan's vice president of communications, said in an e-mail.

As the state's economy improves and small businesses are making more hires, they are also having greater difficulty hiring qualified employees, Rogers said. In February, the association developed a new program to help small businesses find the employees they need.

The Talent Exchange, an online portal that connects small businesses to thousands of potential employees, matches up companies with applicants based on skills, interests and requirements. The portal's purpose is to save business owners time and money, Rogers explained.

These small businesses and others across the U.S. are contributing to the country's total increase in employment.

In 2014, businesses with less than 50 employees were responsible for 46 percent of the country's increase in jobs, contributing 1.26 million jobs to the total 2.73 million gain that year, according to February's ADP National Employment Report.

Small businesses can also receive assistance from the Michigan Small Business Development Center which has 11 regional offices that help entrepreneurs solve problems related to planning, starting and growing a small business, according to Annie Olds, regional director at the northwest region's center in Traverse City, Mich.

"Small businesses are what drive our economy in this region, and we are seeing a huge turnaround with the businesses we are working with—they are hiring and growing," Olds said.

Olds'regional development center assisted 286 small business clients in 10 counties last year, and 55 percent were food and agriculture related businesses.

This year, the center is offering a class for potential business owners looking to start a food or agriculture business. The 10-week program is co-taught by the center's staff and Michigan State University Product Center faculty. Participants end the class with a formal business plan to start their future company.

Harrisville physician retires after 28 years

By Mary Weber Staff Writer

"Wherever the art of medicine is loved, there is also a love of humanity."

~ Hippocrates
Alcona County residents

Alcona County residents will feel the loss of a physician who served the community for 28 years, but the community's loss will be the world's gain.

Dr. James P. Richards retired from his practice at the Harrisville office of the Alcona Health Center at the end of February. He plans to spend more time with his family and also serve as a missionary physician for third world countries.

Richards came to Alcona County to complete a scholarship requirement for four years, but stayed long after that commitment fulfilled and continued to practice family medicine. He said it was the type of community he had always imagined practicing in; he could never see himself with an inner-city, urban practice.

Richards grew up in the township of Mancelona located in northern mid-Michigan. "I was raised on a farm, much like a lot of my patients. I like the community environment and being part of that," Richards said.

 $After\,graduating\,from\,high$ school, Richards joined the United States Navy and served for eight years. He then attended Oral Roberts University in Tulsa, Okla. Upon completion of his bachelor's degree Richards entered the College of Human Medicine at Michigan State University and graduated with his medical doctorate degree in 1984.

He completed a family residency in Midland, Mich., prior to coming to Alcona County. "I had a national health service corps scholarship for a good portion of my medical school expenses. Repayment of that (scholarship) was to practice in a designated health manpower shortage area. Alcona was that area," Richards said.

He explained that his family practice evolved from prenatal care, to deliveries, to the last 10 years where he saw mostly aging patients. "With the duration of time, my patients have grown older as I have, or I've grown older as they have. I'll miss interaction with these folks, some of which were my patients for the full duration of time I've been here.

"One of the things I've valued most in my practice was getting to know my patients and spending time with them," Richards said.

While he will miss his patients and staff greatly, he said he won't miss the current environment of ever increasing medical regulations which is driving a wedge in the health care process. "The regulations require an inordinate amount of time to do all of those extra things and it hinders the process of providing health care," Richards

Richards and his wife, Judy have plans to attend a mission orientation conference for a few weeks in Virginia and then travel to Florida to visit family and friends. They will also be spending time with their six children, two from Richard's previous marriage, and four children the couple adopted from Brazil.

Richards is also looking forward to spending time this summer with his nine, almost 10, grandchildren, as one is on its way.

He and his wife, who is a registered nurse, hope to begin a short medical mission trip in the fall for six to eight weeks -- they will, most likely, be involved with the World Medical Mission. The mission has arrangements with numerous hospitals around the world, but he thinks they will most likely go to South America or Africa.

to settle in a bit, but hasn't fully. It was difficult saying good-bye and a number of tears were shed on my last days seeing patients. I'll miss the staff too. I've had an excellent and valuable staff to work with, pretty much the same people for the last 12 years. I owe them and my patients thanks," Richards said.

"My aim is to continue to be of service. My motivation derives a great deal from my personal faith in God and the desire to serve others. I see this as an opportunity to do

Fruit Tree Pruning

The Alcona Conservation District and the Harrisville Institute for Cultural Learning are sponsoring a fruit tree pruning demonstration on Saturday, March 28 from noon to 2 p.m. The demonstration will be held at the orchard of J.B. Cook (seven and a half miles north of Harrisville, just north of Malaski Road where Black River crosses US-23.)

Alcona Conservation District Associate Director Joe Lukasiewicz will give a brief discussion on apple varieties, effect of rootstock on tree size, planting site selection, and the importance of annual pruning for regular fruit production. JB Cook will talk about his new and antique heritage apple varieties, then demonstrate pruning his trees for maximum fruit production taking into consideration deer browsing pressure. Cook's trees suffered heavy vole damage last winter. He will discuss his strategy for vole management, and participants will be able to see the bridge grafts he did to salvage bearing trees after complete girdling by voles.

The demonstration is open to the public. There is no charge to attend. It is primarily for backyard growers or hobbyists and not intended for those with commercial interest or high density plantings. Lady Tigers fall to Tawas in districts

By Hope Smith

Sportswriter

The Alcona girls varsity basketball season came to an end Friday, March 6 in Oscoda after losing to a tough Tawas team during Class C District competition.

Alcona had tough defensive pressure in the first quarter which caused some problems for Tawas offensively. Lady Tigers Kendra Cole and Alissa Terpstra held their ground in the paint and a late three-point shot from Torie Harmon allowed Alcona to maintain a slim 10-9 lead by the sound of the first buzzer.

In the second quarter, momentum started to shift as Alcona struggled to slow the Braves down at both ends of the floor and allowed too many open shots and clear driving lanes to the bucket. Tawas cruised to an easy 33-21 lead at the halfway mark.

In the second half of the game the Lady Tigers continued to have difficulties delivering the ball to the basket and keeping up on defense. They were outscored 19-7 by the Braves. Tawas went on to push the score to 52-28 heading into the final period. With two of Alcona's best defenders, Harmon and Sierra Forsythe, on the bench with foul trouble Tawas was able to drop some three-point shots from the perimeter.

Even though the Lady Tigers were in foul trouble they fought back hard late in the fourth quarter outscoring Tawas 20-10. By that time the deficit was too large and the Braves held on to secure the 62-48 win and the Class C District Title.

The Lady Tigers were led by Cole with 12 points and nine rebounds and Sydney Peirce with 12 points. Harmon had 10 points and six assists. Samantha Schopfer scored seven points; Nicole Walen added three points and five rebounds; Forsythe made two points and grabbed nine rebounds; and Terpstra put in two points.

"We really worked hard tonight but Tawas was the better team. I was very proud of my girls especially my seniors," said coach Brad Cole.

On Wednesday, March 4 Alcona traveled to Oscoda for Class C Semifinal District competition against the Owls.

Alcona's offense was dialed in from start to finish. They started with an early 17-4 lead over the Owls. In the second quarter momentum continued in Alcona's favor as they pushed the ball up the floor to extend their lead to 34-10 by halftime.

Alcona clamped down hard on defense in the second half preventing Oscoda from scoring. The Lady Tigers held strong as Oscoda tried to rally back in the third period. Terpstra stepped up offensively for Alcona to deliver 10 of her 14 points to extend the lead to 50-21 heading into the final period.

Momentum continued in Alcona's favor in the final period with several Lady Tigers scoring to finish the night with a commanding 71-27 victory.

Cole led the team with 21 points and 10 rebounds -her ninth double-double this season. Terpstra delivered 14 points and pulled down nine rebounds. Schopfer added nine points and snatched six steals. Forsythe scored eight points; Harmon added six points and five assists; Walen made four points and grabbed 10 rebounds. Pierce picked up four points and grabbed four steals; Kendra Lafave delivered a three-point shot; and Brooke Shultz added two points in Alcona's win.

The Lady Tigers finished the regular season at 10-10 overall and 10-5 in the North Star League.

Cole was named to the second team in the North Star League All Conference. Torie Harmon was given an honorable mention.

Beware of IRS telephone and e-mail scams

State Police (MSP) post in Alpena has been contacted by a number of citizens reporting that they have been the victim of a scam involving the IRS.

According to these citizens, they have been contacted through a phone call and through e-mail from someone representing the IRS. The person calling, a male with a foreign accent, stated they are from the IRS.

The caller advised citizens that they owe the IRS additional money and if they do not pay this money:

- They will be arrested within a certain amount of
- Their bank accounts will be frozen if they do not com-
- An arrest warrant will be issued by the state police if they do not comply.

In reality, the IRS never contacts a citizen via the telephone or through e-mail, but instead by the United States Postal Service and, at no time will the state police obtain an arrest warrant for an IRS complaint.

The fictitious e-mail stated they need to complete the W-8BEN from: Certificate of Foreign Status of Beneficial Owner for United States Tax Withholding and Reporting (Individuals).

These e-mails typically target nonresidents of the Recently, the Michigan U.S. and use the W-8BEN format to acquire personal details such as mother's maiden name, passport number, date of birth, PIN numbers and passcodes.

The legitimate IRS Form W-8BEN, does not ask for any of that information.

The information in all of these calls and e-mails is all false information. The IRS will not contact tax payers by phone or e-mail, but instead via the United States Postal Service. The fake IRS caller/e-mailer is attempting to gain financial information to the citizen's social security number, bank accounts and credit cards.

The Michigan State Police reminds citizens they should never give or verify any personal information such as their full names, Social Security number, or any banking information over the phone unless they initiated the original call.

According to the Michigan State Police, anyone who receives this type of call should advise the caller that they know this is a scam and do not accept these phone calls in the future. Do not respond to any of the fictitious e-mails either.

Authorities at the MSP post in Alpena have compiled all the pertinent information in regards to this matter and require no further information from the public at this time.

SENIOR LIFESTYLES

Essential legal documents all seniors should have

Dear Savvy Senior,

What kinds of legal documents are suggested for endof-life plans? I would like to get my affairs in order before it's too late.

Getting Old

Dear Getting,

Every adult - especially seniors - should have at least four essential legal documents to protect them and their family. These documents will make sure your wishes regarding your estate are legal and clear, and will help minimize any conflicts and confusion with your family and your health care providers if you become seriously illness or when you die.

Here are the key documents you need, along with some tips to help you create them.

• A Will: This document lets you spell out your wishes of how you'd like your property and assets distributed after you die, whether it's to family, friends or a charity. It also allows you to designate an executor to ensure your wishes are carried out, and allows you to name guardians if you have minor or dependent children.

În addition to a will, if you own real estate or have considerable assets, another option you may want to consider is a "revocable living trust." This functions like a will but allows your estate to avoid the time and expense of probate (the public legal process that examines your estate after you die) and helps ensure your estate's privacy.

 Durable Power of Attorney: This allows you to designate someone you trust to make financial, tax and legal decisions on your behalf if you lose your decision-making capacity.

 Advanced Health Care Directive: This includes two documents that spell out your wishes regarding your end-of-life medical treatment. The two documents are a "living will" which tells your doctor what kind of care you want to receive if you become incapacitated, and a "health care power of attorney" which names a person you authorize to make medical decisions on your behalf if you become unable to.

If you have a simple estate and an uncomplicated family situation, there are several good do-it-yourself guides that can help you create all these documents for very little money.

For creating a will, a top resource is the Quicken WillMaker Plus 2015 software (available at nolo.com) that costs $50, works with Windows personal computers and is valid in every state except Louisiana. If you use a Mac, nolo.com offers an online will maker for $35.

Or, if you only need to create an advance directive you can do it for free at caringinfo.org (or call (800) 658-8898), where you can get state-specific forms with instructions. Or for only $5, an even better tool is the Five Wishes document (agingwithdignity.org, (888) 594-7437), which is valid in 42 states and will help you create a customized advance direc-

If, however, you want or need assistance or if you have a complicated financial situation, blended family or have considerable assets, you should hire an attorney. An experienced lawyer can make sure you cover all your bases especially when writing a will or living trust - which can help avoid family confusion and squabbles after you're gone.

Costs will vary depending on where you reside, but you can expect to pay somewhere between $200 and $1,000 for a will, or $1,200 to $5,000 for a living trust.

The American College of Trust and Estate Counsel (actec.org) and the National Academy of Elder Law Attorneys (naela.org) websites are good resources that have directories to help you find someone in your area.

If money is tight, check with your state's bar association (see findlegalhelp.org) to find low-cost legal help in your area. Or call the Eldercare Locater at (800) 677-1116 for a referral.

Alcona students open eBay store

By Mary Weber Staff Writer

Properly preparing students with life skills they will need is the goal for almost every high school across the nation.

Rick Sedgwick, a special education teacher at Alcona High School knew that preparing his students in technology would be key to life skills they'd need. Being an avid golfer and having some knowledge about buying and selling golf clubs on the Internet through eBay, he thought if he could get a few of his students involved in a similar quest, it would be a way to open an array of valuable skills.

With the help of his wife, Robin, who is a title one paraprofessional at Alcona Elementary School, to get the program set up on eBay with a Pay Pal account, and by enlisting the help of Sedgwick's special education para professional, Patty Geml, "ucrewbayalcona" has become a reality. The store has already made two sales on eBay.

A small grant was provided by the school in order to get the students set up with golf clubs to sell. Sedgwick has donated some used clubs and he also loaned a new set of clubs, which the students have to repay him for once they sell.

So far two students have taken an active role in the Internet store operations -senior Stephanie Fry who is acting manager for the golf store and an eighth-grader, Julian Fisher who is the assistant manager. Fry has been learning how to type data information for the advertisements on eBay and some other essentials of running a business, while Fisher cleans the clubs, photographs the items with his cell phone, and gets them ready to ship.

"Mr. Sedgwick is our CEO," Fisher said. She explained that he knows a lot about golf and golf clubs and can help answer customer questions. Geml and Robin Sedgwick are supervisors of the store

Robin Sedgwick explained the process to set up an eBay store for a nonprofit school organization was harder than setting one up for an individual home business. "It was a little tricky trying to go through school and still have the site secure so the kids could learn how to do this.

We went through Pay Pal for selling our goods so it would be secure and our kids wouldn't get scammed," she said

She said it was very unusual for eBay and Pay Pal to receive a request like this for special education students and once she started talking to technical service at eBay and Pay Pal they were very receptive and excited about the program and made sure everything was set up properly for the kids.

Rick Sedgwick explained that special education students are seldom the stars of the school and the endeavor was providing them with an opportunity to be involved in a cutting edge educational experience that will garner respect from their peers.

The students are just beginning to understand all that goes into a business and the realities of not having sufficient funds to do everything they want to promote their business and achieve goals.

Geml said it was unlikely the company would see a profit this year but was hopeful that down the road it may and they would be able to take some kids on a senior trip. "Not all of these kids have had the opportunity or resources to even travel much in Michigan. We teach geography and I ask the students if they have ever been to the Upper Peninsula or Tahquamenon Falls or the Detroit Zoo and they say 'no.' We'd like to be able to give something back to the kids for all their hard work. It would be nice to get our kids out more, even a trip to Frankenmuth would be nice, Geml said.

Rick Sedgwick said the most valuable component of the ucrewbayalcona initiative was the pride realized by the students. "Our special education students have exhibited increased enthusiasm in the classroom as a result of being involved in this project. As with all young people, any success in one area of life transfers to others," Rick Sedgwick said.

Ucrewbayalcona is seeking funding and products to sell. Fisher said they are starting with the golf clubs, but hope to secure community donations in a variety of new and used items to sell in the future. They are also looking for monetary donations to purchase a United States Postal Service approved scale to weigh their packages for shipping.

In the future they want to augment the eBay component with a semiannual rummage sale which will provide additional retail experience for the students. They may also, at some point, manufacture a product to market.

"The store is called ucrewbayalcona, the 'u' stands for unique. Our special education students are very unique, they are one of a kind and you won't find

Safety tips for spring ice fishing

It's almost officially spring but there still may be numerous opportunities in different locations throughout the state to get out on the water. Just remember, there are a few important safety precautions to take if planning to do

- Towards the end of the season, ice becomes rotten and soft. Although ice may still be more than a foot thick, it might not be strong enough to hold someone safely.
- · Don't forget to still carry the appropriate safety items, such as ice picks and a throw rope. And remember to wear a personal flotation device.
- Continue to use the buddy system to ensure that someone will help if you fall through the ice.
- Carry a fully charged cell phone in a waterproof plastic bag. Make sure it is easily accessible on your person in case of an emergency.
- Pay attention to the weather. If it hasn't been consistently cold or if there has been a lot of wind you can't guarantee there will be solid ice to head out on.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR) is seeking input from anglers who fish for inland trout in Michigan. The DNR plans to use the information to assist in the development of a statewide plan for inland trout fisheries.

The Michigan Inland Trout Angler survey will gather information about these anglers, how they fish, what their thoughts and opinions are on inland trout management, and other items. Inland trout populations are defined as populations that spend their entire lives in inland lakes and streams, and generally do not migrate into the Great Lakes.

"The information we obtain from this survey will be critical in our effort to make sound management decisions," said Troy Zorn, research biologist with the DNR's Fisheries Division. "We hope anglers will take the time to complete it so our future management plan is reflective of their input."

Available online, the Michigan Inland Trout Angler survey is available now until Tuesday, March 31. It should take anglers approximately 10 to 20 minutes to complete.

Shrinking number of teachers signals end of a dream career

By Brooke Kansier

Capital News Service
Many children aspiring to be teachers when they grow up could end up having a change of heart.

In the face of increased pressures due to standardized testing, new college entry tests, and a lack of societal respect for the profession, fewer students are pursuing teaching careers, according to education advocates.

"Nationally and in Michigan, there are fewer students going into education," said Corey Drake, director of teacher preparation at Michigan State University. Enrollment in university education programs fell 10 percent nationally from 2004 to 2012, according to the U.S. Department of Education.

The number of initial certificates issued by the Michigan Department of Education (MDE) has also been declining annually, according to Leah Breen, interim director of the department's Office of Professional Preparation Services.

Drake said some smaller Michigan universities have seen enrollment in teaching programs dropping as much as 30 to 50 percent.

Standardized tests and national Common Core standards have garnered a much larger focus in the state in past years. Michigan Education Association President Steve Cook said these testing goals have altered how teaching is conducted and lowered the amount of input teachers have.

"Not one of them got involved because they thought they were going to be rich," Cook said. "They want to teach. And they get there and find out, I'm not doing that much teaching, I'm a professional test proctor."

James Muchmore, assistant chairman of Teaching, Learning and Educational Studies at Western Michigan University, said people have become too critical of teachers and teaching. "While teachers do play a critically important role in our society, we tend to overstate their influence and often end up trying to hold them accountable for things over which they have little control," Muchmore said. "We routinely link teachers to our country's economy, as if third grade test scores are somehow related to worker productivity or the GNP."

These challenges have also meant shorter stays in the classroom for many educators. Forty to 50 percent of new teachers leave the profession in their first five years, according to a 2014 New Teacher Center report. The report also states that about 13 percent of the nation's teachers leave every year.

While some of these departures can be attributed to layoffs and other factors, Muchmore said job dissatisfaction also plays a large part.

"In the wake of the Great Recession, many states passed laws reducing teachers' job security, cutting their salaries and benefits, increasing class sizes and limiting their collective bargaining rights," he said.

Changes in legislation, including more difficult testing methods and teacher evaluations, have also been a factor, Cook said.

In 2013, Michigan introduced the more rigorous Professional Readiness Exam (PRE) as a tool to evaluate aspiring teachers' knowledge based on the Common Core, which outlines standards for knowledge among K-12 students. The test, taken upon students' entry to their university's teaching program, has a 31 percent pass rate, very low compared to the state's previous entry exam, the basic skills test, which averaged 89 percent.

The test can be taken an unlimited number of times, but students aren't admitted to teaching programs until they pass or complete alternative methods for some portions of the test.

While the test is taken in a university setting, Drake said most of the preparation for the exam occurs during a student's high school career, where the Common Core is a large part of curriculums. "Students' struggles to pass the exam are often a reflec-

The cooler was given to the school by the United Dairy Industry of Michigan with funds made available by Michigan dairy farmers. The addition of the new milk cooler allows young children to take their milk right from the cooler and frees up space in an existing cafeteria cooler for the weekend milk program Dellar started for kids in need. Ashford and Spears both volunteer for the school and help put milk into cold packs for the children to take home with them each Friday. Dellar said she is hoping to get a milk program started at the high school soon. Photo by Mary Weber.

tion of uneven high school for all students — we need preparation," Drake said. "I am concerned that it might particularly be contributing to a less diverse group of teachers entering the profession... A diverse teaching force is critically important teachers who bring diverse perspectives, knowledge.'

Breen defended the pre test, saying teachers should be able to demonstrate the same knowledge their students will be tested on, regardless of deficiencies in their own K-12 educations.

A committee of K-12 educators and representatives from various Michigan universities developed the test, which focuses on the core subjects of reading, mathematics and writing, as well as various topics that students should have learned in high school.

Drake said he fears the test could disproportionately affect prospective teachers from urban and small rural schools, where students do not have access to the same resources as districts with more funding. "I think we need to look carefully at the test to make sure it is not biased, as well as consider multiple measures of preparation for teaching," Drake said. "We certainly do not want it to be the case that students who received a lower quality high school education cannot become teachers."

A change in public attitude is needed before teaching becomes a more popular career choice, Muchmore said. "Teachers impact the emotional, physical, and intellectual well-being of our children. They play a key role in helping to shape and sustain our society from one generation to the next," Muchmore said. "At some point, people will realize that the current round of teacherbashing is counterproductive to the well-being of our society, and it will change."

Graptopetalums BY BRENDA WEAVER This succulent (a plant with leaves or stems that store water) comes from Mexico. The rounded, triangle-shaped leaves form a Fibonacci spiral. Those grown in partial shade tend to be blue-gray; in full sun, they are pinkish gray to yellow; in very hot sun, gray-pink. Graptopetalums bloom in spring, producing dainty sprays of star-shaped vellow flowers.

Planting northern Michigan's future

By Andrew Beebe

Living in northern Michigan, there is a good chance that planting trees is not a totally unfamiliar task.

Whether planting trees is familiar or unfamiliar, this spring might just prove to be a great opportunity to bury some roots in the ground. Before rushing out the door to start planting, it is important to have a proper plan of action in mind.

While tree planting isn't an incredibly specialized discipline, there are a few things to keep in mind. Knowing exactly what's being planted, where it's being planted, why both the site and the species are wise choices, and what the intended accomplishment of the plantings are is a great way to achieve the greatest chance of success. In short, doing a little research, or "treesearch" if you will, is always necessary prior to planting.

Species selection is a very important aspect of a successful planting project. There can be quite a few tree species that may do well on any given property. Instead of mixing and matching it is often better to determine why the planting is necessary and decide which trees will best accomplish these goals.

The next step is to decipher what the proposed planting location has to offer tree seedlings. To understand what the planting location has to offer the young seedlings, its best to first take a closer look at the property's soil types and look at how much light the proposed planting environment receives. Some trees will not thrive in certain soils. Likewise, different trees need different levels of light to realize their full potential.

· Soils are arguably the most important driver behind a tree's health and longevity. Furthermore, different tree species can tolerate different soil conditions. Contact the local Conservation District or United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) service center to receive information about individual trees and soils maps specific to the planting location. There is also a great free online resource that enables users to explore information related to soils at websoilsurvey.gov.

• Tree spacing is a very important consideration as well. Tree spacing is not an exact science by any means, but it is important to have a baseline understanding of what a good spacing is. Tree spacing is also an aspect of what species are being planting and why they are being planted.

Conifers can be planted at much higher numbers per acre than hardwoods, but what the specific dimensions are revolves around what the desired finished product is. For instance, if wildlife habitat is the goal, it is generally a good idea to plant trees a little further apart than in a timber production planting.

It's also important to keep in mind that in the future it may be necessary to maintain the planting by harvesting some trees so that others have more room to grow and thrive. If trees are planted too thick, not only will they quickly be in competition with each other, but they may also not reach a merchantable size by the time that custodial thinning is necessary.

In this case, planting too many trees per acre will result in it being very difficult, if not impossible, to find a logger willing to purchase the small diameter trees.

Because of factors like this it is very important to think about what the planting will look like in 20 or 30 years and what types of management techniques will need to be employed to keep the trees healthy.

- Preparing the planting site prior to planting trees is often necessary to give the trees the best chance possible. Site preparation most commonly refers to managing weeds and grasses that may choke out the newly planted trees. Site preparation can be accomplished either mechanically or chemically with herbicides. The method of site preparation to choose depends highly on what vegetation is currently growing on the site and what is available to use.

District, or some other dealer it is important to make sure they are cared for properly until they are planted in the ground. While transporting the trees it is best to keep them near 40 degrees if possible. Remember to always keep them covered from exposure to the sun and keep the roots moistened.

- Before actually planting, it might be a good idea to become familiar with a tree planting diagram before digging in the dirt. When planting bare root seedlings, open up a hole large enough to accommodate the trees roots.
- Next make sure that the trees roots are cascading down and outwards and ensure that the roots are not in a "J" or "U" shape.
- When filling in the planting hole make sure that the root collar is flush with the soil just as it was when it was growing in the nursery.
- Finally, make sure to tamp down the soil around the tree so there are no air pockets present around the tree's roots.
- Remember that there is a little more to tree planting than can be fit into this article so it is always best to contact a professional or read

Spring migration is such a fun time of year for backyard birders. Don't just watch feeders for visitors, keep an eye on your birdbath as well. Some birds are only interested in fresh water, like the female summer tanager that hung out in my yard a few days ago.

Public comment sought on draft update of 2008 Michigan Wolf Management Plan

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR) has completed a draft update of the 2008 Michigan Wolf Management Plan and is seeking public comment during a 30-day period which began March 4.

The 2008 Wolf Management Plan was created using extensive public input to identify important issues and assess public attitudes toward wolves and their management, as well as a review of the biological and social science on wolves.

The four principal goals within the plan are to:

- Maintain a viable wolf population.
- Facilitate wolf-related benefits.
- Minimize wolf-related conflicts.
- · Conduct science-based and socially acceptable management of wolves.

The plan and, more specifically, the four principal guided wolf management in Michigan for the last six and a half years.

Beginning in November 2014, the DNR sought comments on the implementation of the 2008 plan. During the comment period, the DNR received more than 3,000 responses to its online and hard-copy survey. Based on those responses and corresponding comments, and an internal review of the docu-goals within the plan have ment, a draft updated plan recently was completed and is available for public review and comment.

The four principal goals in the 2008 plan remain the same in the updated plan. The 2015 draft also includes updated scientific literature and new information and facts regarding wolves in Michigan. A companion document, which summarizes DNR management accomplishments in addressing the action items from the 2008 plan, also is available for public review.

The draft updated plan and the 2008 Summary of Management Accomplishments document are available for download at Michigan.gov/ wolves.

Send comments on the draft updated plan to DNR-Wildlife@michigan.gov or via U.S. mail to DNR Wildlife Division, P.O. Box 30444, Lansing, Mich. 48909.

Comments must be received no later than April 3.

StarWatch By Gary Becker - Dawn Reaches Ceres

💲 Ceres, the bright dwarf planet and first discovered asteroid (1801), is being scrutinized by NASA's Dawn spacecraft. Launched in 2007, Dawn first orbited the second most massive (third in volume) asteroid Vesta in 2011-12. Then its ion engines drove it onward towards the largest and most massive asteroid Ceres, designated as a dwarf planet by the International Astronomical Union in 2006. Dawn went into orbit around Ceres on March 6. Ceres and Vesta are also considered intact protoplanets, the second last stage in the evolution of the major planets in the solar system. Protoplanets then collided and merged with each other to form the planets that populate our solar system today. Protoplanets between Mars and Jupiter where Vesta and Ceres are found, but not necessarily where they formed, were nudged and pushed by the gravitational forces of massive Jupiter, causing collisions and grinding down their sizes. Vesta and Ceres were lucky in that they suffered numerous smaller hits, but none which were traumatic enough to fracture them into lesser pieces. Basically intact, they represent some of the earliest primordial samples of the solar system. Additionally, both asteroids have major differences in their composition. While Vesta is essentially composed of darker, rockier material, Ceres appears to be more primitive, possessing about a quarter of its mass as mostly water ice. This has led astronomers to hypothesize that Ceres and Vesta formed in two different regions of the solar system and long ago were somehow gravitationally driven into their present-day orbits. Already Dawn has discovered Ceres to be a heavily cratered and gouged world, involved in numerous scrapes and hits with other smaller bodies, similar to Vesta. Unlike Vesta, Ceres also has some vivid bright spots where geysers or cryovolcanic activity, ice eruptions, may be occurring. It's definitely a new "dawn" for Ceres and icy asteroids in general. www.astronomy.org

 Ever wonder why so many coin banks are shaped like pigs? Here's the story: In ancient times, a lump of clay was called a "pygg." A clay bowl formed from this lump would often be used to hold loose change, and it was called a pygg bowl bank. According to legend, at a later point in history, a potter unfamiliar with the term received an order for several of these pygg bowl banks. Instead of the bowls, he made coin banks shaped like pigs; they became such a hit that they're still around today.

National parks pass is summer bargain

The National Parks and Federal Recreational Lands Pass can form the basis for numerous trips and adventures this summer, and it's a bargain at $80.

Not all of the national parks are natural wonders. Some sites are museums, islands, vintage buildings, lighthouses, canals, forts, homes of former presidents, national battlefields, historical parks, monuments, recreation areas, scenic rivers, preserves, wildlife refuges and memorials. Activities at national parks can include but aren't limited to camping, hiking, fishing, climbing, diving, boating, skiing, swimming and photography.

What your pass covers: One year of entrance for each passenger in your non-commercial vehicle, to include the pass owner and three adults age 16 and older (kids are free). You'll need a photo ID. Note: Some sites charge per vehicle, and some per person. Ask in advance.

If you're military, get your free pass by showing your military ID at most parks that charge a fee. Best bet: Get your free pass in advance.

If you're a senior, get your lifetime pass at a park site that issues them. It will cost

No trip will be complete without a copy of "Passport to Your National Parks." The 104-page books are loaded with information: color-coded maps, pre-visit information, illustrations and photographs, free map and guide to the park system. At each spot you visit, stamp your book to record your visit at the cancellation station. Not all parks have this, but most

Each book is $8.95, but spring for the annual commemorative stamp sheet for $3.95 to add to your pages. Each year has different stamps to promote a different park in each region. If you have kids, consider adding the "Kids' Passport to Your National Parks Companion" for $5.95. Each one contains a field journal, list of Junior Ranger programs and checklists to go along with the Passport book. Order at www.eparks.com.

Google "national parks passport" and click Images to see photos of Passport Learn about the National Park Service at www.nps.gov. For specific questions about what the pass covers for each park, call 1-888-275-8747, option 3.

This year, the fee-free dates are April 18-19 (opening weekend of National Park Week), Aug. 25 (National Park Service Birthday) and Sept. 26 (National Public Lands
